Next, the terminal to be activated establishes a connection to the data network via a further POP if the signaling information or the received number indicates that the caller was a VoIP server of the data network. To do this, the terminal to be activated dials the number of a further, nearby POP server of the data network over the telephone network and establishes a connection to this POP server. The POP server can then establish, for example, a connection through the data network to the VoIP server from which the activation of the terminal ~~originated~~ originated.

Please replace the paragraph beginning at page 15, line 12 with the following rewritten paragraph:
